Excerpt: . . . maximum width is 6 inches, and its height 814, inches. Nothing else was found in the mound. The Singleton mound was composed of earth and showed no stratification. Particles of charcoal were scattered here and there but there were no charcoal deposits such as were found in the Plott mound. The mound earth extended to the natural clay surface which was four feet below the summit of the earthwork at the center. SCATTERED ARTIFACTS During the writers sojourn in Haywood county he was fortunate enough to collect a number of artifacts that had been found on the surface, including a variety of steatite ornaments, most of which are drilled for suspension. Steatite pipes were seemingly numerous and range from the small trade-pipe form to the large and massive L-shaped variety ornamented with carving. Celts were not common in this neighborhood, and only one grooved ax was obtained. A large number of small discs of steatite and other stone were collected, but comparatively few arrowpoints were gathered.
