Excerpt: .were held by the uninitiated in the same estimation as those of Ceres and Bacchus at Eleusis (already referred to), and Isis and Osiris in Egypt. The Phrygian tales of Cybele and Atys seem to be another version of this same fable. One specimen has been painted with a ground-colour of blue, and then red, or probably flesh-colour, and has the stamp of Grecian art. Mr. Abington remarks of this piece, and several others similar in the collection: -- They are all of high art; it is not too much to say that, as sculptures, they are of great value. No. 16 exhibits the human form in the very perfection of human symmetry--no wonder that Venus fell in love at first sight. The artist has done his part well in this beautiful conception of the adored Adonis. The ivy chaplet shews the relation there was...
