Not illustrated. 1863 Excerpt: .we can stand at the foot of the cross, and be stirred by the recital of all that happened there. Only let us beware that the feelings of Lent do not end with Easter. Possibly the butler was moved when Joseph told him the tale of his wrongs; but his emotion did no good, for he forgot it in the time of prosperity. And little will it avail that we have followed Jesus through the dreary wilderness, into the Garden of Gethsemane, and wept at the Mount of Calvary, if we do not think upon them when the temptations of the world come upon us, and when we are tempted, like the butler, not to remember Jesus, but forget Him. Jtatartag affer f pfo Smtirag in fest. Read Genesis, forty-second chapter, being the Second Lesson in the Old Testament, for the Third Sunday in Lent. In the two last chapters which we have read, we have seen Joseph in affliction, and have compared him in some particulars to our suffering Redeemer; let us this morning notice the points of resemblance and of difference between the prosperous Joseph and our risen Lord. And, first, we see that the ingratitude of the butler was no hindrance to Joseph s advancement, but rather the means whereby it was accomplished; just as the ingratitude of those Jews who requited our Lord s love and kindness by crucifying Him, was made the means of bringing about the redemption of the world....
